

Scotland and Climate Change -

Getting it Right

Louise Batchelor is a freelance journalist and broadcaster who has long specialised in energy and environment issues, from her early days on the Milton Keynes Gazette and Oxford Mail newspapers to her career with the BBC. Louise was a founder member of BBC Radio Scotland's reporting team when the station was launched in 1978. She has worked as a presenter/reporter on many television programmes, including Reporting Scotland, Newsnight in London and Newsroom South East and from 1994 to 2008 was BBC Scotland's Environment and Transport Correspondent.

Louise has twice won British Environment and Media Awards for her news and current affairs work. Other activities include being a Director of the Fair Isle Bird Observatory Trust, a member of the executive group of the Partnership for Action Against Wildlife Crime in Scotland and membership of a community woodland steering group.
